butter and in the labor of making it, and slightly in the quantity they make."

But the testimony is not all in favor of deep setting. A correspondent of the Rural New Forker gives an account of three experiments upon deep and shallow setting. He took a quantity of milk well mingled together and deprived of its animal heat, and then divided it, setting one half shallow and one half deep. In every case the shallow setting produced the most butter. In conclusion, he says these experiments seem all to point one way and that against deep setting.

The Country Gentleman quotes several experiments tried by various gentlemen, as given in the Buck's county (Ps.) Intelligencer, all esulting in favor of shallow setting. These experiments were somewhat imperfectly conduited, as the milk was not sllowed to remain in the water bu a short time, and in some cases was not cooled in the water at all. We can hardly regard this q estion as conclusively settled, although the weight of evidence seems to be in favor of deep setting.

time, and in some cases was not cooled in the water at all. We can hardly regard this q estion as conclusively settled, although the weight of evidence seems to be in favor of deep setting.

SHALL BUTTER BE WASHED?

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes in this wise: "Water we will not allow to touch it, knowing that it does wash out all the delicious sugar of the milk." Mr. Bliss says that the butter should be rinsed with clear cold water till no appearance of milk remains. A greater difference of opinion could not well exist than is here shown, but butter makers have always held conflicting opinions on this point, and probably always will.

How much shall Butter be Worked? is the next question. If not worked sufficiently, the butter soon taints. If worked too much, the "grain" is injured, and the butter is "saftey." Scylla on the one hand, and Charybdis on the other of Agriculture says: "It is desirable that the style of butter as well as the quality should be uniform throughout the entire season, which can be accommented the region of the same and the surface and the style of butter as well as the quality should be uniform throughout the entire season, which can be accommented to be used to the same and the ugly looking larvae of this family, inhabiting Africa, is cleven inches in length.

The accommon potato-worm is entirely harm-less to man, as are all the ugly looking larvae of this family. The bawk-moths Sphingidæ, also called humming-bird moths, are among the largest and stoutest of Lepidoptera. When at rest, the wings are folded, roof-like, over the body. The larvae when at rest stand with the fore attitude. The larvae generally carry a horn on the last segment of the body. Of this family there are some 30% or 400 species known. Species most abundant in tropical America.

The Experiedae are gaily colored moths, and look much like bees and wasps. There are little tuttes of hair at the end of the body, which they can spread out like a fan. They fly yery swiftly in the hottest sunshine. The larv

Or, is it yearning for a higher vision, By spiritual hearing heard? Rearer I drew, to listen with precision Detecting not a word.

Then, peering through the pane, as men of sin do, Myaelt the while unsees, I marked a maiden seated by the window, Sewing with a machine.

Her gentle foot propelled the tireless treadle,
Her gentle hand the seam:
My faacy said, it were a bliss to peddle
Those shirts, as in a dream!

Our Story Teller.

Her lovely fingers lent to yoke and collar Some imperceptible taste; The rural swam, who buys it for a dollar, By beauty is embraced. O fairer aspect of the common mission! Only the Poet sees The true significance, the high position Of such small things as these. Not now doth Toil, a brutal Boanerges, Deform the maiden's hand; Her implement its soft sonata merges In songs of sea and land.

And thus the hum of the unspooling cotton,
Blent with her rythmic tread,
Shall still be heard, when virelays are forgotten,
And troubadours are dead. Guy Hilliard's Skeleton.

home. What a happy couple, every one said—even the wiseacres in spite of their prophecies.

But there never was a paradise, perhaps, that the serpent did not enter in some form or other. It even came to this perfect little home, trailing its slimy ugliness amid the blooming flowers. It was after this wise:

One evening Guy chanced to come home a trifle earlier than usual, and Violet and baby were not at the gate to meet him, as was their custom; but he hurried on eager to surprise

He stood still where she had left him, listending to her light footsteps as she ascende: the fing to her light footsteps as she ascende: the mother of his babe—the only woman he head even loved? He was on the point of rushing after and imploring her forgiveness; but that stinging pain came back to his heart and held him back. She was false to him—let her go. At that instant he heard her voice calling softly from the head of the stairs:

"Go, wing thy flight from star to star, From world to luminous world, as far far as the universe spreads its flaming wall; fax at the pleasure of all the spheres, and muttiply each through endless years, One minute of love's is worth them all?"

Was he awake—in his senses—was it ascende: the fing to her light footsteps as she ascende: the mod the world. I'm worse off than old King Lear. I am driven almost to madness.

My story is of love, blasted, withered, crushed the mother of his babe—the only woman he was on the point of rushed was on

THE LITTLE BOY THAT CHEES. I know a little dumpy bey, He's almost five years old, And he is but a baby yet, I grieve to have it told.

IIIs eyes are black, but often dim With tears that freely fall; We've other babies in the house, But he outeries them all! Sometimes we have a doleful wail Before he's out of bed, And while he's dressed, you'd be surprised To bee the tears he'll shed.

He hurts his finger—then he screams, Falls down—screams ten times loud And if you laugh, you raight as well Set off a keg of powder? He cries for bread, he cries for cake, He cries when some one tease; And when he's washed, you'd really think He'd cry himself to pieces! But I must say—to speak him fair, He is not always screaming; His black eves often shine with fun, His face is bright and beaming.

And he can laugh and jump and sing, And I am glad to tell you, His lips can smile and kiss as sweet As any little fellow. And don't yeu think this little boy Should stop his crying? We all should love him so much more, It's surely worth the trying. For little hurts, and pains, and aches, He must keep back his tears, Or he won't be a man, although He live a hundred years! BAD WORDS.

Hush, hush, my lad! Pray don't repeat
The bad words snoken in the street,
Wrong, and unfit for you:
Perchance the lad those words who said,
'Mid orime and darkness born and bred,
Their meaning little knew. But you, so much more higly blessed, Of Christian home and friends posses

Of Christian heme and friends por And Christian knowledge too, To take God's holy name in vain, Or utter any words profane, Is surely guilt in you.
